

Transmission to Earth: Message #1

Dear Humans,

For many years, I have been watching you from afar, studying your ways. I am here to share what I've learned, for I believe that even you sometimes forget what it truly means to be human.

At first glance, your world appeared to me as a wasteland. Where I come from, cities are so vast that your planet seemed empty—a deserted land stretching endlessly. But as I scanned these grounds, I witnessed a flash of something beautiful, and tears poured down my face.

It was love that I saw.

In that moment, I felt as if I were the one who came from the desert. You see, where I'm from, we don't have this love. Nothing this strong exists in my world. My heart was under attack, and in this moment of vulnerability, I came to know you so dearly.

I realized that the things we might say to each other, the understanding we could share, could make us dangerous. This love, this emotion—it makes us lightning.

As night descends upon your sleepless city, I observe the space between each of you filled with electricity. What an experience you have given me! There is so much to consider in witnessing your vulnerability.

I find myself with a desire to understand this more deeply. This love has taken me aback, awakening a thirst I've never felt before. I've even begun to speak like you. Though I can't be certain, if I have never felt love before, it might be that I feel it now. In seeing you all love each other, I have grown to feel something that resembles love for you.

Thank you for listening.